In February 2012, a product page for Call of Duty: Black Ops 2 appeared on Amazon France and was quickly#128170; taken down. No information had yet been released by Activision, but Gameblog claimed that Activision demanded the removal of its#128170; original report too.[22] When it refused to do so, the publisher reportedly cut off Gameblog from ad support, review game#128170; mailings, and future Activision events for refusing to comply.[23] Activision denied Gameblog#39;s claims that it had been cut off.[24] Around#128170; the same time, computer game artist Hugo Beyer also listed "Black Ops 2" as his current project in his LinkedIn#128170; CV, then removed his LinkedIn page.[25] Beyer is an artist working for Nerve Software, "a Dallas-based independent developer" which has#128170; "helped" with previous Activision games including Black Ops in 2010.[26] A "Black Ops 2" trademark by Activision was spotted January#128170; 2012.[27] Further, Black Ops 2 was listed by the France international entertainment retail chain Fnac in March 2012, which touted#128170; a predictable November release date.[28]
